What's Involved When Residents Want to Charge a Plug-In Vehicle Within a Multi-Unit Dwelling Community?

Learn about the stakeholders involved, the decision process flow and possible issues for multi-unit dwelling communities interested in the installation of vehicle charging units for electric cars.

Seminar Highlights

- ▶ Provide an overview of vehicle and charging equipment coming to market
- ▶ Define and address concerns of property managers/owners, homeowners/renters, and electrical contractors regarding the installation of charging equipment
- ▶ Describe the steps needed to help you craft your community's site-specific policy
- ▶ Identify talking points for when someone in the community asks, "Where will I plug-in?"

Who Should Attend?

- ▶ Property Managers/Owners
- ▶ HOAs and Rental Associations

- ▶ Residents of multi-unit dwelling communities interested in plug-in vehicles
- ▶ Electrical contractors

You Will Learn

- ▶ The suggested steps involved
- ▶ Who needs to be involved
- ▶ What types of vehicles and charging equipment are coming to market
- ▶ Industry-specific terminology

Speaker

Joel Pointon is the Manager of Electric Transportation for SDG&E and has initiated a national emphasis program on plug-in electric vehicle charging for multi-unit dwellings. He serves on a number national advisory panels for electric transportation and has presented on this topic extensively in California and the U.S.

Offering informative seminars is one of the ways SDG&E is helping our business customers manage their energy use and reduce operating costs.

This program is funded by California utility customers and administered by SDG&E under the auspices of the California Public Utilities Commission. California consumers are not obligated to purchase any product or service mentioned in this program.

If you have specific questions regarding SDG&E's energy-efficiency programs and related rebates, call SDG&E's Energy Savings Center (ESC) at 1-800-644-6133.
